* Lia-fàil, -e, s. f. (Lia, s. 5. et Fàil, i. e. Fàidh-eil), The stone on which the Scottish kings, and according to some Irish writers, the Irish kings more anciently, used to be crowned; now in Westminster Abbey. lit. The prophetical, or fatal stone: lapis super quem olìm reges Scotiæ sedebant inter coronandum et secundum quosdam scriptores Hibernos, Hiberniæ reges necnon, in patria sua, antequam in Scotiam deportatus fuerat lapis ipse; nunc in Westmonasterio est. lit. Lapis fatidicus, vel fatalis. "Fuit is lapis cathedræ instar fatalis, ut qui ubicunque inveniretur, Scotis regnum portenderet. Hinc, usu venit, ut de Hispania in Hiberniam vecti, et de Hibernia in eam Albionis partem quæ nunc Scotia appellatur, Scotorum reges in eo marmore insidentes, usque ad Roberti primi Scotorum regis tempora, coronarentur. Suprascriptio lapidi, longa pòst secula (ut res ipsa indicat), hæc est inscripta:

"Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum
"Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem."
Boethii Scot. Hist. Lib. i. fol 2.

Thus translated by Holinshed:—"This stone was in fashion like a seat, or chaire, having such a fatall destinie, as the Scots say, following it, that wheresoever it should he found, there should the Scotsmen reigne, and have the supreme governance. Hereof it came to pass, that first in Spaine, after in Ireland, and then in Scotland, the kings which ruled over the Scotishmen, received the crown sitting upon that stone, until the time of Robert the first, king of Scotland. The inscription also of the stone, though ingraven long time after, as should appear, was this:

Except old sawes doo faile,
and wizards wits be blind,
The Scots in place must reigne,
where they this stone shall find."

Both the words "Lia," and "Fàil," are not indeed, now at least, intelligible, or known in Scotland, unless the former in some names of places, as, "Achanlia," i. e. Stony-field, at the head of Loch Suanart in Argyleshire. Vox quidem Lia, itemque Fail, vix, ac ne vix quidem, a Caledonibus modò intelliguntur, sed in multis locorum nominibus, compertæ, olim in usu fuisse liquet; sic, Achinlia, i. e. lapidum campus, qui est hodie sic appellatus in Argatheliæ comitatu locus.
